Diabetes can strike anyone from any walk of life in numbers that are dramatically increasing. In type 1 diabetes, the body does not produce insulin. Insulin is a hormone which is needed to convert sugar, starches and other food into energy required for daily life. Unlike individuals with type I diabetes, the bodies of people with type II diabetes make insulin but either their pancreas does not make enough insulin or the body cannot use the insulin well enough.

When a person with type II diabetes becomes extremely sick or seriously dehydrated and is not able to drink enough fluids to make up for the fluid deprivation, they may build up this life-threatening complication. Pre-diabetes, also known as impaired fasting glucose is a health condition with no symptoms at all. It is basically a wake-up call that people are on their route to diabetes. However, it is never too late to turn things around.
