Players can engage in these challenges every hour and day. The highest scorer of each hour earns $3 while the top scorer of each day takes home $10. This setup enables users to pocket up to $2,400 per month presenting a side hustle for avid gamers.

The app's operation is simple; users submit their Clash Royale matches to En Garde, which then assesses them using its algorithm. Results are displayed on leaderboards allowing users to monitor their progress and earnings. Each user begins the day, with 3 Green Gems with each gem enabling one match upload. This system encourages participation and fosters a spirit of competition.

En Garde distinguishes itself by ensuring that users don't have to gamble with their money.

The application is completely free of gambling and betting elements and all prize funds are supplied by En Garde. Users do not incur any fees or deductions, from their earnings making the app entirely cost-free. For an experience, users have the option to subscribe to En Garde Pro, a service offered at a rate of $4.99.

Subscribers receive benefits such, as Gem replenishment and extra functionalities that can enhance their performance.

En Garde currently supports Clash Royale. Plans are in place to expand its offerings. In August En Garde will roll out support for Valorant widening the horizons for esports fans and casual gamers alike.
