Vancouver Film School named in MovieMaker's 'Best Film Schools in the U.S. & Canada 2021'. VFS was previously included in the magazine's 2019 list of 40 schools.

Other schools named alongside VFS include AFI Conservatory, New York Film Academy, Boston University, Columbia University, Queen's University, Toronto Film School and University of British Columbia.

40 schools were selected for the 2021 list.

Disciplines considered during deliberation included writing, producing, directing, cinematography, overall production, business and more scholarly studies of cinema and mass media.

(VANCOUVER, B.C.) July 21, 2021 – Vancouver Film School is pleased to announce that it has been included in MovieMaker's Best Film Schools in the U.S. & Canada, recognized specifically for its "outstanding 3D animation and VFX training." The publication's list included a total of 40 film schools. VFS was previously recognized in 2019.

Other Canadian schools named alongside VFS include Vancouver's University of British, Toronto Film School, Ryerson University, and Queen's University. American schools include New York Film Academy, Boston University, and AFI Conservatory. The full list can be viewed here.

In a precursor, MovieMaker stated that its 2021 list is a continuation of a “tradition of highlighting the best film schools in the United States and Canada, highlighting not just the universities themselves, but particular programs with curriculums we find compelling and useful, based on specific paths students can pursue.”

“Vancouver Film School is humbled to be named a Top Film School by MovieMaker. As a global creative force, VFS strives to set the standard of excellence in post-secondary education – not just in the film industry, but in all creative industries. We are constantly changing, constantly adapting, all in an effort to provide the most current and informative education to aspiring creatives around the world.”-James Griffin – President, VFS
