In Gang's article, he addressed the background of the water contamination at Camp Lejeune in North Carolina and the chemicals found in the water. He addressed the legal presumptions applicable to toxic exposure at Camp Lejeune and how to prove service connection for illnesses that are not on the presumptive list for Camp Lejeune.

Our knowledge is our most valuable asset, and we strive to reach as many veterans as possible.”

Eric Gang

Zlatanovic addressed the health issues concerning the anti-malarial drug, Mefloquine. He addressed its contemporary use and the various adverse health consequences of its use. Specifically, attorney Zlatanovic, who is a former Chair of the New Jersey Bar Association's Military and Veterans Affairs Section, explained how the adverse consequences of Mefloquine could serve as the foundation for a claim for

VA service-connected compensation. Zlatanovic also called on the VA to adopt a policy conceding Mefloquine exposure and to engage with the Department of Defense to study the long-term effects of Mefloquine exposure.
