Based on Absolute Markets Insights' findings, government bodies are spearheading the vaccination campaigns, especially in yellow fever affected areas in Africa and South America. Based on studies by the World Health Organization, it has been found that a dose of yellow fever vaccine can protect an individual for a period of around 35 years. These vaccines are cost-effective, produce high results, and are relatively safe for use in individuals. Government campaigns are effective in vaccinating individuals, especially in rural and semi-urban areas. The Ghanaian Ministry of Health, in partnership with Ghana Health Service, and other organizations such as the WHO and the UNICEF, conducted a mass vaccination campaigns in Ghana from 12th to 18th November, 2020. In other instance, the Brazilian government had launched a vaccination campaign in 2018 in the municipalities in Rio De Janeiro and Sao Paulo, and around 23.8 individuals were expected to be vaccinated during the immunization drive. The campaign was supported by the Pan American Health Organization (PAHO) and the WHO. The standard dose of the vaccine was primarily provided to children between the ages of nine months and two years, and people who were suffering from medical conditions. In 2017, the Brazilian government had sought the support of the PAHO for the control of yellow fever causing mosquitoes in Bahia, Rio de Janeiro, Minas Gerais, and Espírito Santo. Based on statistics from the Brazilian Ministry of Health, around 130 confirmed cases of yellow fever was reported in the country from July 1, 2017 to January 23, 2018, and 53 individuals perished due to the disease. Government vaccination campaigns are expected to gain momentum in the coming years, thus leading to the growth of the revenue in the global yellow fever vaccine market.
