According to Absolute Markets Insights report, Polyethylene terephthalate (PET) accounted for the higher market share in 2020 and is projected to maintain its dominance over the forecast period (2022-2030) in the recycled plastics market. The growth in this segment can be attributed to high demand for packaging of food & beverage products. The product is widely used for numerous application such as moldings, bottles, jars, fibers etc. on account of its chemical resistance, excellent impact & tensile strength, and thermal stability. Moreover, growing use of food grade recycled polyethylene terephthalate (PET) in bottle-to-bottle processes along with voluntary pledges by producers for recycled polyethylene terephthalate (PET) target content in line with EU Single Use Plastics Directives is projected to further accelerate the production. Furthermore, changing trade flows of plastic waste has impacted the waste volumes positively, such a factor has produced new trade avenues for plastic flakes, bale and food grade recycled polyethylene terephthalate (PET). The aforementioned factors have positively influenced the market growth of recycled plastics especially recycled polyethylene terephthalate (PET).

Recycled plastics market has been segmented into polyethylene terephthalate (PET), high density polyethylene (HDPE), polypropylene (PP), low density polyethylene (LDPE), polyvinyl chloride (PVC), polystyrene (PS), and others. Polyethylene terephthalate (PET) followed by high density polyethylene (HDPE) to dominate the recycled plastics market in 2020. The growth in these segments can be attributed to increasing product consumption for food packaging and consumer goods applications. High density polyethylene (HDPE) segment is likely to grow at fastest pace on account of its cost efficiency in terms of production compared to virgin counterpart. Furthermore, increasing demand for high density polyethylene (HDPE) pipes and cables in China and India is projected to propel the segment growth.

From demographic stance, developed countries generate more plastic waste as compared to developing countries on account of high purchasing power for variety of plastic packaged products. However, high adoption of plastic management systems and green initiatives in developed countries is projected to decline mismanaged waste in the extended run. For instance, Circular Plastics Alliance (CPA) initiative in Europe targets around 10 million tons of recycled plastic into final products by 2025. Moreover, bans on single-use-plastics (SUPs) along with economies of scales setting for bio and recycled plastics is further likely to increase the product penetration and drive recycled plastics market growth regionally.

Key Findings:

- By type, the polyethylene terephthalate (PET) segment registered for the major share of revenue in the recycled plastics market in 2020.
