-- When considering a kegerator, ensure it's worth every penny. A significant part of this consideration is knowing how long beer lasts in a kegerator. While the answer isn't exact, some averages can give something to think about. We can learn more about how long beer lasts in a kegerator and some great purchasing options.

How Long Does Beer Last in a Kegerator?

The answer to this question isn't simple. Beer staying fresh in a kegerator can depend on the beer style, the type of pump, and the temperature at which it stores the beer. A pasteurized beer can stay fresh anywhere between 3 and 6 months. Not pasteurized beers will last up to 2 months. The different beer styles can impact how long the beer stays fresh.

Generally, the kegerator should be at around 38 degrees Fahrenheit. If the temperature is over 50 degrees Fahrenheit, the beer can grow bacteria, leading to the beer spoiling sooner. Lower than that, it risks the beer freezing.

Do the research to see the ideal temperature for the type of beer we are storing in the kegerator to ensure that we keep it at the proper temperature.
