What is a calcium carbonate?

Calcium carbonate is a crystalline, tasteless, colorless, and odorless carbonic salt of calcium. It is obtained from limestone rocks by mining and quarrying procedures and can be manufactured commercially through the decomposition and re-carbonization of carbon dioxide. Calcium carbonate is frequently found in precipitates and grounded forms, and it is widely used as a whitening agent, mineral filler, and alkalizing agent as well as in the production of plastics, paints, papers, rubber, and adhesives. Additionally, this substance is utilized in pharmaceutical products as a calcium component to enhance bone health and as an antacid to lessen heartburn, acid indigestion, and other digestive issues.
