Microwave ovens are defined as devices that cook food by exposing it to electromagnetic radiation in the microwave frequency range.

The main product types of microwave ovens are grill, solo, and convection. A grill microwave has radiant heating on the top, which is useful for grilling or roasting. The baked item would be a combination of raw and burned due to the heat of the microwave. Microwave ovens have various applications, such as commercial and household. Microwave ovens are further classified based on their design such as countertop or built-in. Microwave ovens can be distributed by specialty stores, supermarkets/hypermarkets, online sales, or other distribution channels.
