Vice President of the Retired Player Congress, Ron Brown

Celebration Wellness Costa Rica’s premier stem cell rejuvenation treatment center. Brown has had several stem cell therapy procedures to help aid the toll athletics took on his body throughout his career.

“The NFL Retired Players Congress has always looked for options when it comes to coping with post athletic career injuries,” said Vp of the Retired Player Congress Ron Brown. “We are beyond privileged to announce our partnership with Celebration Wellness and provide access to necessary treatments for our members. The Players Congress plans to send 50 to 100 players annually to Celebration Wellness.”

“Celebration Wellness is excited about teaming up with the Retired Players Congress and the support it receives from the NFL Players Association, the NFL Player Care Foundation, and the National Football League,” said Tim Kopatich, Chief Executive Officer of Celebration. “We plan to treat retired players who may be suffering with debilitating orthopedic, chronic traumatic encephalopathy (CTE) and other pain management concerns at our Celebration Wellness center in Costa Rica. ”

Ron Brown is a former American football wide receiver and winner of the gold medal in the 4x100 meters relay at the 1984 Summer Olympics. Brown was raised in Los Angeles, California and chose to play college football at Arizona State University. After the Olympics, Brown joined the Los Angeles Rams and played there until 1989 when he moved to the Los Angeles Raiders in 1990. Brown ended his football career after the 1991 season, when he played again for the Los Angeles Rams.
