The St. Louis Business Journal distributed surveys through a third-party surveyor, Quantum Workplace, to determine winners of the award. Quantum Workplace used its own tools to measure communication, management, structure, benefits, teamwork and other factors at each company vying to make it on the list of Best Places to Work. These companies were grouped by number of employees and ranked by Quantum Workplace to determine the winners.

“I'm very proud of our team for making Springer Physical Therapy one of the best places to work in St. Louis,” Springer Physical Therapy CEO Dr. Lisa Springer said.

“We've worked hard to build a great environment here and it's centered around providing excellent patient care and taking care of our employees. My personal philosophy when we're going through the hiring process is that you have to be a naturally kind person to work here because that's something that can't be taught. Thankfully, I feel like putting a focus on that has paid off for us and we have an amazing team. I'm excited for the future at Springer Physical Therapy and to be known as one of the best places to work in the region."

Springer Physical Therapy scored a 93.97 on a scale of 0-100 in the Best Places to Work in St. Louis program, measured through a range of research-validated workplace factors that impact employee engagement and satisfaction. This score was built through the Quantum Workplace survey and took into account employees' willingness to go above and beyond in their work, advocate for the organization and their intention to stay with Springer Physical Therapy into the future. It was clear through responses that employees feel pride in the work at Springer Physical Therapy and feel extremely valued in the organization.

"I am very happy to be working at Springer because of the culture," Physical Therapist Jessica McGuire said. "Everyone is so eager to help each other. The camaraderie between staff and patients is palpable, creating not only a great work atmosphere but also an ideal environment for healing. The compassion that our staff has to treat the whole person and the continual sharing of knowledge motivates me and reignites my passion for what I do. At Springer, I feel inspired, supported, and most of all, pride in what we are doing for the profession and the community."

The St. Louis Business Journal's special awards section was published May 17, and members of the Springer Physical Therapy team attended a finalists and winners luncheon May 16 at the Marriott St. Louis Grand Hotel. Springer Physical Therapy was also named to the Best Places to Work list in 2022.
