LONDON, UK, June 7, 2024

/EINPresswire.com/ -- In 1922 Colonial Africa, a young boy on the brink of manhood, Penrose Matsile, was suddenly stolen from his village and captured as a goat herder. Penrose lived with a white family for over three decades, striving to find his true self. His life became a journey of seeking identity and belonging, and is a powerful testament to human resilience. In today's modern society this would be unheard of, and yet there are likely still parts of the world that are experiencing this in real time.
