About the Author

Gaileen Crowell is a retired nurse who was raised on the plains of Wyoming and has always had a passion for history and books. She currently lives in Colorado on the Eastern Plains, enjoying camping and the outdoors, along with reading and writing.

Gaileen aims to create stories that foster unity and support. Her love for storytelling is evident in her ability to craft narratives that entertain and impart meaningful lessons.

The inspiration behind writing this book stems from a couple of years ago, the author began creating 16-inch pony dolls from cloth, meticulously dressing them in charming 1860s-style clothing to sell as unique gifts. As she crafted each doll, vivid stories blossomed in her mind, imagining the various adventures and scenarios these ponies might experience. One day, she shared these whimsical tales with a friend, who saw the potential and urged her to bring these stories to life in written form. This encouragement led to the creation of her first children's book "Hallie Loses Jenna", where the enchanting worlds she envisioned for her pony dolls finally come alive on the page.

Her message to her future readers, "Always read every day and keep your mind open to all the possibilities books can bring you.
