Advancing gender equality in venture capital is not only ethically imperative but also a strategic business move. Research demonstrates that VC firms with a higher proportion of female investing partners make more successful investments, achieve higher fund returns, and experience more profitable exits.

Guo's remarkable success, coupled with her pageant win, proves that women can excel in any arena, refusing to let outdated perceptions limit their potential in tech, finance, or leadership roles.”

Dr. Seth Dobrin

Despite concerted efforts to increase gender diversity in the venture capital (VC) industry, significant gender disparities persist. Women currently represent only approximately 11% of investing partners at VC firms in the United States. Moreover, startups with at least one woman on the founding team receive only about 13% of venture capital funding. The share of VC funding allocated to all-female founders has stagnated at 2.4% over the past 30 years. Additionally, nearly three-quarters of U.S. VC firms lack a single female investing partner.

Guo's advocacy for gender diversity and her recent recognition as Mrs. North America 2024 exemplify her multifaceted talents and commitment to excellence. She continues to inspire and lead, driving innovation and positive change in all her endeavors.
