We support those who strive for justice. But most of us have very little ability to make things right. There are many calls for justice in our present environment. Even if every one of us has a slightly different definition of "justice done," we all want to see it happen. But what does justice entail, and how to apply it to day-to-day interactions? In modern times, "justice" is both a contentious concept and a felt need. However, precisely what is justice, and to whom does it belong to?

All I can say is, we'll have to keep our eyes and ears open.”

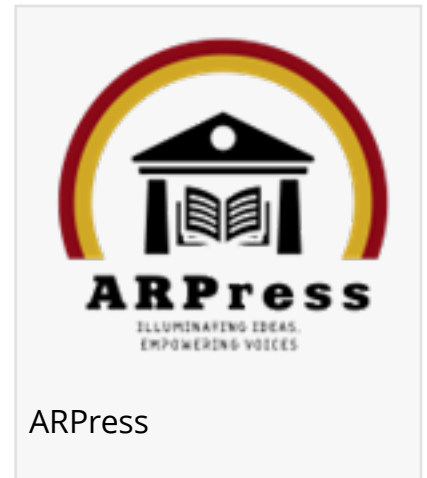

excerpt from the book

The author, Walter Wittmus, is a man of the heartland who has his fingers on the pulse of what makes people tick from living a middle-income life with a wife and three kids. He would love to have you join him in the complexities of bringing criminals to justice.

“Murder and Mayhem in Cedar Falls” presents John Brennon, a college professor of astronomy, and Denise Cole, a college professor of music, both of whom dabble in helping the police solve crimes of almost any kind. They live in Cedar Falls, a small Midwestern town that has crimes of rape and murder to solve, with a coven of witches to muddy up the water.

It makes sense that we would demand justice when we are treated unfairly. However, what exactly does "justice" mean? Is getting even the only desired? What can we do when injustice occurs? Allow justice to flow down like water. Everything has justice ingrained in it. We can therefore perceive when it is absent.
