Armada, James Mahoney brings a unique perspective to his poetry. With a rich background in the auto industry and a lifelong passion for the arts, Mahoney's work is imbued with artistic sensitivity drawn from his experience as an amateur painter and stained-glass artist. Following his retirement, he turned to poetry to express and heal from the devastating loss of his wife of 43 years. This journey culminated in his poignant collection, "Love, James: Poems of Sickness and Loss".

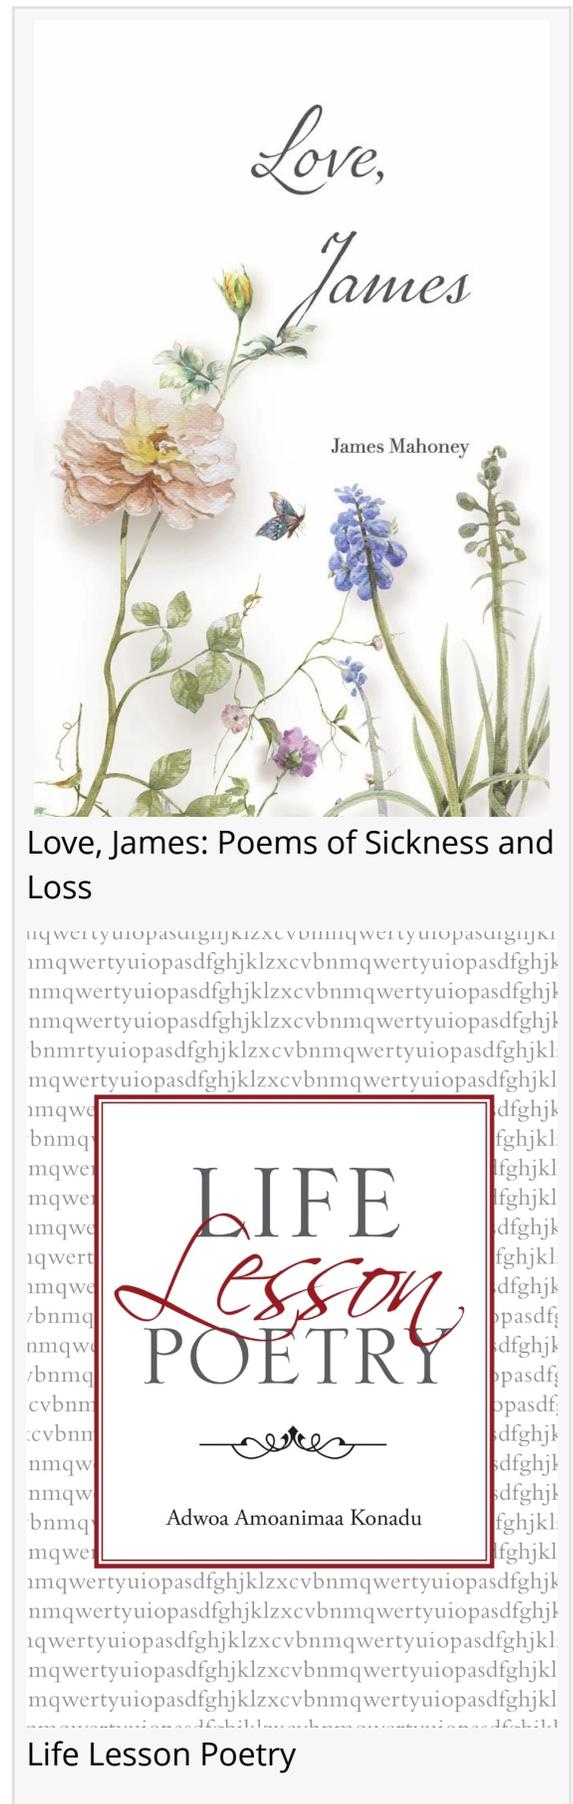

In "Love, James: Poems of Sickness and Loss", Mahoney captures the profound sadness, frustration, and journey toward inner peace that marked his grieving process. His poems explore the universal themes of love and tragedy. Through his writing, Mahoney seeks to help others navigate their grief and find comfort in shared experiences.

Former medical secretary and now author Adwoa Amoanimaa Konadu invites readers on a journey of reflection and introspection through her book, "Life Lesson Poetry". This heartfelt collection of poems chronicles her personal experiences of healing, self-discovery, and spiritual growth.

James Hillman explores the heart of the "science versus religion" debate through his book, “Religion & Science: Thoughts of a Common Jim” from a unique angle. Rather than framing it as a clash of absolutes, Hillman, known for his insightful cultural commentary, explores the emotional underpinnings and motivations behind this discourse. He challenges the simplistic dichotomy often portrayed in contemporary discussions, encouraging readers to ponder whether these arguments are more driven by emotions than objective analysis.

Through his introspective approach, Hillman aims not to undermine either side but to deepen our understanding by uncovering the emotional forces at play. Drawing on his expertise in psychology and cultural studies, he presents a nuanced analysis that prompts readers to reconsider how emotions influence our views on profound existential questions, morality, and the meaning of human life.
