Dermatology Online Journal, a distinguished peer-reviewed clinical research publication in the field of dermatology, was the first open-access online medical journal when it published its initial issue in 1995. As a digital-only publication, it serves a global audience with the latest in dermatology clinical and research information.

"We continue to be dedicated to disseminating accurate and educational clinical and research information to the dermatology community worldwide," said Dr. Barbara Burrall, MD, Editor-In-Chief of Dermatology Online Journal. "Together with the Dermsquared team, I look forward to evolving DOJ so that more dermatologists across the globe can access and participate in sharing the latest dermatology information with the goal of improving our patients' lives."

"As a well-established and premier PubMed-indexed journal, we are thrilled to have DOJ complement our existing SKIN The Journal of Cutaneous Medicine® publication and strengthen our overall solutions platform," said Eric Bruno. "We are excited to bring DOJ into the Dermsquared fold as a distinguished publication to bring the latest research to the dermatology community and better serve patients."

About Dermatology Online Journal

Dermatology Online Journal was created to explore the educational potential of distributed hypermedia served via the World Wide Web. The journal serves the dual role of providing relevant information and improving the way scholarly content is shared.

Founded by Arthur C. Huntley, MD, as the first open-access online medical journal, DOJ published its first issue in 1995. What began as a small publication of a few articles 1 to 4 times per year has now expanded into a bi-monthly journal that publishes 20 articles or more per month. It has been peer-reviewed since inception and has been PubMed accessed for more than 10 years. It is currently viewable on dermjournal.org.

DOJ generates significant interest domestically and internationally. It has more than 700 reviewers in its reviewing database that includes physicians and academics from all over the world.
