Chronic Respiratory Diseases Propels Growth Of The Pulmonology Laser Market

The rise in chronic respiratory diseases is a key driver of the pulmonology lasers market. These conditions, which affect the airways and lung structures, lead to breathing difficulties and significantly impact quality of life. Factors contributing to the increase in chronic respiratory diseases include air pollution, smoking, an aging population, urbanization, and climate changes.

Pulmonology lasers are utilized for diagnostic bronchoscopy and therapeutic interventions such as treating airway obstructions or tumors. According to the Australian Institute of Health and Welfare, approximately 2.8 million Australians have asthma, and about 638,000 have chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD), underlining the growing need for effective treatment options.
