fostering collaboration among Caribbean nations to enhance global competitiveness with a specific emphasis on regional dominance.

Among the extensive comments, Mr. Christian focused on highlighting the need for smaller islands in the region to adopt a united approach, Mr. Christian advocated for the establishment of a regional network of affiliates rather than individual partnerships. This collective model, he argued, would enable Caribbean nations to pool resources, streamline operations, and amplify their influence on the global stage.

“Smaller islands operating independently face significant challenges in competing with larger economies,” stated Mr. Christian.

Right from the start Mr. Christian’s address drew upon his extensive macroeconomic experience, including over 25 years at the intersection of finance and technology. He has played pivotal roles in corporate leadership, regulatory compliance, and has led groundbreaking legal filings such the 2024 amicus brief in the case of Epic Games vs. Google, filed with the United States Courts of Appeal for the Ninth Circuit, where his insights have helped shape industry standards. As the CEO of the tech startup Fyouture and operator of a reputable consulting firm, Mr. Christian exemplifies innovation and commitment to social impact.

In his address, Mr. Christian outlined five strategic pillars essential to the success of a unified Caribbean economic network:

1. Technology leadership: Establishing a sound ecosystem for regional dominance in the field of Technology, not limited to innovative tax revenue advantages to attract global investments.

2. Trade and Investment Integration: Establishing a Caribbean Free Trade Zone to create a cohesive market and attract global investments.

3. Multi-national Infrastructure Development: Enhancing regional transportation, energy, and digital connectivity to reduce costs and improve accessibility.

4. Tourism Cooperation: Promoting multi-destination travel packages and standardizing protocols to elevate the region's appeal.

5. Human Capital Development: Investing in education, workforce mobility, and research initiatives to foster innovation and entrepreneurship.

6. Strategic Climate Resilience and Sustainability: Developing shared disaster response mechanisms and implementing sustainable practices to safeguard regional resources.

Near the ending Mr. Christian emphasized that “The Caribbean’s strength lies in its unity and that through collaboration and shared vision, we can transform challenges into opportunities and position our region as a formidable economic powerhouse.”

After widespread acclaim, the summit concluded with commitments from participating nations to pursue regional integration initiatives and prioritize collective progress. Mr. Christian’s thought-provoking address was met with positive feedback, resonating as a rallying call for Caribbean leaders to seize the opportunities afforded by collaboration.
