dermatologic care.

“I am delighted to join the medical advisory board for CLn Skin Care, a company whose products have had a significant impact on my clinical practice,” said Professor Ryan. “As the primary author of the 2013 feasibility study on CLn BodyWash in pediatric atopic dermatitis patients, I have seen firsthand how beneficial this innovative product can be. Over the years, I’ve recommended CLn BodyWash as a cleanser not only for eczema but also for patients prone to folliculitis, hidradenitis suppurativa, and acne, observing excellent efficacy and tolerance. I look forward to collaborating with the CLn team to further explore and expand the possibilities for these and other dermatologic cleansing needs.”

Professor Ryan’s clinical expertise includes treating a wide range of dermatologic conditions such as psoriasis, eczema, acne, and skin cancer, alongside advanced cosmetic procedures like anti-wrinkle injections, dermal fillers, and laser treatments. Her passion for medical education and her leadership roles with organizations such as the International Psoriasis Council underscore her dedication to advancing the field of dermatology.

By welcoming Professor Ryan to its Medical Advisory Board, CLn Skin Care reaffirms its commitment to collaborating with leading dermatologists to provide innovative, clinically proven solutions that improve skin health.
