Foundation's \(ATF\) formally announced today that Boeing is supporting Class 32 of ATF's flagship ReDefine program, continuing its steadfast efforts to help injured veterans and first responders.

“

Their (Boeing's) deep-rooted commitment to serving those who serve has profoundly enriched the lives of the ill, wounded and injured service members that ATF is honored to walk alongside.”

David Vobora, ATF Founder

Since 2018, Boeing has been a key partner in ATF's mission, becoming the longest-running title sponsor for the nonprofit. During this time, Boeing's generosity has directly impacted more than 60 veterans and first responders through the ReDefine program.

The ReDefine program provides individuals with traumatic injuries nine weeks of customized physical and mindful training, helping them rediscover their strength, purpose, and physical capabilities. Class 32, running from February 4 – April 11, 2025, will serve 13 all-military and first responder athletes at ATF's Carrollton, Texas facility. The program is completely free to participants, relying on supporters like Boeing to make this transformation possible.

"Boeing believes in the power of community and the resilience of our veterans. Our partnership with The Adaptive Training Foundation through the Military to the Mountains program exemplifies our commitment to empowering those who have served. Together, we are not just providing support; we are helping create opportunities for healing, growth, and transformation in the lives of our heroes," said Mike Lawson, Senior Manager of Boeing Global Engagement.

"Boeing's steadfast support has been monumental in expanding the ATF mission since 2018. Their deep-rooted commitment to serving those who serve has profoundly enriched the lives of the ill, wounded and injured service members that ATF is honored to walk alongside," said David Vobora, ATF Founder.

Through corporate partnerships like Boeing's, ATF continues to empower veterans and first responders, providing the resources and training needed to reclaim their lives—inside and outside the gym.
