Leading players of the global frozen dough market discussed in the research include Tyson Foods Inc., General mills, Ajinomoto, CSM ingredients, Rich Products Corp, J&J snacks Foods Corp., Europastry, Bridgford Foods, Nestle, and Guttenplans.

Growth of the food services industry, adoption of convenience food with the growth of sedentary lifestyle, and increase in demand for organic food drive the demand for the global frozen dough market. However, availability of substitute products and decreased baking quality of dough leads hinder the market growth. On the contrary, rise in demand for vegan food and expanding sales channels create new opportunities in the coming years.

Covid-19 Scenario:

During the pandemic, demand for frozen dough flourished in the residential segment because individuals preferred not to step out of their homes, and frozen dough was easy to store and cook choice, resulting in an increase in consumption of frozen or refrigerated products. Restaurants and food services, which are the most dominant segments of frozen dough, were shut down due to severe lockdown measures. As a result of the pandemic, the frozen bread market suffered a major setback.
