The increasing incidence of colorectal cancer is a significant factor propelling market expansion. Colorectal cancer originates in the colon or rectum and is influenced by genetic predisposition, lifestyle choices, and environmental factors. An aging population, improved survival rates, and rising awareness have all contributed to its growing prevalence.

Vectibix Panitumumab, a monoclonal antibody, effectively inhibits the epidermal growth factor receptor (EGFR), which is essential in slowing tumor growth and disease progression in patients with wild-type KRAS tumors. This makes it a crucial treatment option for patients unresponsive to conventional chemotherapy. According to the World Health Organization (WHO), the global incidence of colorectal cancer is projected to rise substantially by 2040, with an estimated 3.2 million new cases annually, marking a 63% increase.

Another key market driver is the growing demand for personalized medicine, which tailors treatment approaches based on individual patient characteristics. The preference for targeted therapies that improve outcomes while reducing side effects is fueling the adoption of personalized medical solutions in oncology.
